The vaudeville committee has made arrangements for two different vandeville programmes for Friday night and Saturday afternoon. On Saturday night there will be a wedding, under the direction of an Armenian of this city, who is thoroughly acquainted with the ceremony.

The school's session for this term closes on Wednesday, and as Mr. Benton will not excuse anyone from recitations, the seniors will make the old school building hum with preparations for the fair on Thursday and Friday. The most difficult part of the arrangements is the building of the booths and the decorating, which will tend to make Shortridge hall look more like a carnival

The graduating January class will hold its class day, which, with the exception of commencement, is the most important occasion in the four years' course, next Wednesday afternoon at 1:30 p. m. At this time the present which the graduating class always gives to the school will be uncovered. To obtain the money to purchase its gift was the reason the January class gave its successful entertainment of a few weeks ago. The amount cleared there in addition the money already in the treasury amounted to about $120. During its four years' course the January class has been prominent in all school affairs. The achievement of which it is most proud is the Tattler, a room paper, which ran successfully for two terms. Each number of this was carefully typewritten and bound forming the finest paper of its kind which had appeared. From it much of the material for the Mirror was obtained athletics the class probably leads all the others. It has Bohnstadt, T. Shideler Diddle, Spohr, King, Rhodehamel and Pohlman. Snow Birds, in Garden Closes,

When softly from the leaden skies The January snows descend 'Till silence on the landscape lies And trees with their white burdens bend, White not a plume of gray nor gold. No burnished throat nor scarlet wing Appears to glorify the cold. Bold season, or to hint of spring, Then come brown flurries of trim birds In garden closes eddying 'round With flattering joy, like hurrying words Of happy children, yet small sound Of music makes the gladness sweet, But Nature, bountiful of charms, Has blest these wand'rers, frail and fleet,

That nestle in the winter's arms And hop and hold where tempests meet In his torn beard and hoary hair, Till brush and briar and bristle weed Break with the feathered fruit they bear. Whence come the birds with merry speed. The child, untaught of books or art, Knows little, but he feels the thrills Of wings fluttering with his heart.

'Till youth's unsullied gladness fills His spirit with a wild desire To buffet storms and from them bring The breath that fans ambition's fire. Or, like our modest Winter King. Wins strength and valor for dark days. Or daring thoughts that make it gain To live when bloom and warbled praise Are lost to naked wood and plain; And so we bless, with feeble words,
